CHIEF NOEL GIVES INSTRUCTIVE TALK ON FIGHTING FIRE

Head of Narberth Company Addresses Large Gathering Of Men

GIVES MANY "POINTERS"

Tells Men That His Company Followed Suggestions of Underwriters

Members of the Bristol Consolidated Fire Company met in the Community House, last night, and listened to an intelligent discussion of some of the preliminary steps which a fire fighter has to learn.

There was a large gathering and the men came from all sections of the Borough. A total of 75 applications for membership was turned in last night and this brings the total membership, thus far up to over 200 men.

The speaker, last night, was Charles V. Noel, chief of the Narberth Fire Company. The Narberth Fire Company has shown wonderful development under the guidance of Chief Noel and the fire loss in the district covered by the Narberth Company has been greatly reduced.

Chief Noel in his address gave a resume of the early history of the Narberth Company. He told how fire losses in his district were continually mounting and then the Philadelphia Suburban Underwriters came in with their recommendations.

"Following out the idea of the Philadelphia Suburban Underwriters and those made by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, as well as the National Fire Defense, we have progressed to our present state of efficiency of today," the speaker said.

He showed how necessary it was to fight fires in an efficient manner and strongly recommended that speakers be procured from time to time to give the firemen instructive talks and that representatives of Philadelphia Fire School be brought here to give the men instructions.

Chief Noel strongly recommended fire prevention and frequent inspection of business places. He gave the gathering much information of value and was asked numerous questions as to the proper manner to handle certain situations.

"You are well organized here and with the backing of Borough Council, your modern apparatus, fire alarm system and new building, your company should reach a high state of efficiency," he concluded.

SURVEY, WHICH ENGINEERS WILL START SOON, WILL PLAN FOR PHILA. AS HUGE METROPOLIS

Bristol on the banks of the Delaware will be quite near the center of things if the recent prediction of the Philadelphia Public Ledger to the effect that "the Philadelphia of the future will be mighty metropolis of stately towers and broad boulevards, stretching for miles beyond its present limits," come true.

In its issue of Sunday morning, October 2nd, the Ledger set forth a lengthy article to this effect, accompanying same with a fine view of the Philadelphia section of the Delaware, looking upstream, as well as a unique etching of the towns to the north of the Pennsylvania metropolis, of which group Bristol is nearest to the City of Brotherly Love.

The towns and in their order of nearness to the famed Independence Hall are Bristol, with Burlington on the opposite shore of the Delaware, then Trenton, Princeton, New Brunswick, Elizabeth and Newark, to New York.

This picture envisioned by civic and industrial leaders shows the hook-up of all the outlying communities for miles around into one large community with separate political interests, but "a common heritage in spiritual, social and economic matters."

The start made toward this end on September 30th was spoken of, when bankers, business men, engineers and public utility officials approved a proposal of a special committee of the Regional Planning Federation for a comprehensive survey of Philadelphia and its environs. Said survey will cost approximately $420,000 and extend over three years. It will include water supply, sanitation, roads and streets, parks, public buildings, schools and other public institutions.

In part the article said: "The Philadelphia of the future, as it is being envisaged, will undergo many changes, especially in the central city. But before it does, there ought to be, in the opinion of Philip H. Johnson, noted architect and chairman of the sub-committee of the Industrial Relations Committee, more efficiency in public building."

"There ought to be, Mr. Johnson thinks, a board of highly capable engineers who could devote all of their time to the great municipal projects necessary to make the city modern and beautiful."

"These engineers would be selected for their standing in their profession. Three would serve for five years, three for ten years and three for fifteen years, so that there would be change in the board but no radical change."

"As the city does business now municipal projects are carried out in piecemeal fashion," Mr. Johnson said. "Plans are changed with a different administration, or an appropriation is made only large enough to carry the work to a certain point. Private business would never tolerate such methods. They are expensive and wasteful."

"Howard Strong, secretary-director of the Regional Planning Federation of the Philadelphia Tri-State District, conceives Philadelphia as the central point, the inner city, of a vast metropolis of 3000 square miles."

"The improvement of highways running through several political jurisdictions requires joint effort," he declares. "The purification of streams and the preservation of stream valleys as parkways and recreation centers will need the agreement and co-operation of many communities; sewer districts must be determined by natural drainage areas rather than by town or city boundaries; water supply, railroads, electric and bus lines and other public utilities serving widespread areas offer problems of extension and correlation requiring the joint action of many cities and towns."

"This community would extend from Princeton almost to Reading and to points below Wilmington and Glassboro, N. J."

"The metropolitan area of Philadelphia consists of 357 different political sub-divisions, exclusive of school districts. It comprises communities in three States; 211 townships lie within its boundaries, and 129 incorporated cities. And yet this area is so extensive that the population can increase to 16,000,000 and still permit every two families or nine persons to have an acre of ground to themselves."

"One problem getting careful study is that of highways. Small towns no longer want great highways through their centers. These highways merely cause congestion in their streets. The new highways, being planned will skirt congested areas. There are five of these roads now considered by Philadelphia and New York. Two will be for high-speed traffic, another for commercial traffic and a fourth will be a tourist road, passing Valley Forge and other pleasantly bucolic points."

"The new city will have, perhaps, fewer factories. Industrial plants are shifting from the city to rural districts more and more because of the advantages to the employees of suburban life. Motortrucks, replacing railroads to a small degree as carriers, are another important factor."

LATE NEWS

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 27 (I.N.S.)—Fire of undetermined origin early today swept through the Kalb Bros. Candy Co. factory here resulting in damage estimated at $15,000.

LANCASTER, Pa., Oct. 27 (I.N.S.)—Frank Hilton, 55, a mill worker, shot his wife, Cora, 50, to death as they lay in bed at Parkesburg, near here, early today, and then turned his revolver on himself, ending his own life. The couple was spending the night at the home of Mrs. Hilton's father, Taylor Irely, where yesterday they attended the funeral of Mrs. Hilton's mother. No cause could be learned for the double tragedy. Both were shot through the head, and death was instantaneous in each case.

J. A. CALLAHAN AND MISS MCGINLEY WED

Ceremony Takes Place at St. Mark's Church Before Large Company

BOTH WELL KNOWN

A wedding of interest took place yesterday afternoon at four o'clock in St. Mark's Church, when Miss Mary Catharine McGinley, of 236 Otter street, in the presence of many friends and relatives, became the bride of Jaffrey A. Callahan, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Callahan, of 423 Princeton avenue, Trenton, N. J.

Rev. Father James J. Sullivan performed the ceremony and Miss Catharine Keating presided at the organ. During the ceremony, Mr. Ralph Waters, of Germantown, cousin of the bride, played a number of violin solos.

The bride was charmingly dressed in a silver gray transparent velvet gown made on straight lines with the side drapery caught with a handsome rhinestone pin. She also wore a close fitting silver metallic hat with gray satin slippers and stockings to match. Mrs. Callahan carried an arm bouquet of pink chrysanthemums tied with long ends of pink chiffon.

Miss Mary Fox, of 333 Radcliffe street, who wore a beautiful frock of rose colored, transparent, velvet, made also on straight lines, with low neck and long sleeves, was bridesmaid. Miss Fox's costume was further enhanced with a tight fitting black velvet hat, without trimming, black satin slippers and dust colored stockings. She carried an arm bouquet of white chrysanthemums tied with long ends of rose colored chiffon.

John J. Sweeney, of Trenton, N. J., attended Mr. Callahan, as groomsmen.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Callahan left for the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, Philadelphia, where a wedding dinner was served the bride and a few friends consisting of Miss Anna Lippincott, of Bristol; Miss Mary Archibald, Mr. William Logan and Mr. Jack Ryan, of Trenton, N. J. Mr. Sweeney, the best man, was host at the dinner.

The happy couple and the rest of the dinner party spent the evening at the Erlanger Theater, where they witnessed a performance of "Crisis Cross."

Mr. and Mrs. Callahan left at midnight for New York, where they are passing their honeymoon. Upon their return, they will reside on Carteret avenue, Trenton, N. J., where the groom is connected, with the Tax Inheritance Department of the State of New Jersey.

They will be at home to their friends after November 1st. The bride, who is well known here, was born in Bristol and received her education in St. Mark's School, from which she has been graduated.

Girl Reserves All Ready To Boost Sale of Daisies

The centers at which those who will sell daisies on Daisy Days, which are sponsored by the Girl Reserves of the Bristol High School, are announced as follows: Sixth Ward, residences of Dorothy Hardy and Dorothy Santo; Washington street, home of Helen Lechner; Buckley street, home of Winifred Tracy; Otter street, Henrietta Davis' home; Radcliffe street, Marian Harrison's residence; Edgely, the homes of Virginia Dager and Beryl Wilson.

October 28th and 29th have been set aside for the sale of these flowers, the proceeds of which will be used for the use of the dental clinic.

BRISTOL YOUTH GIVEN $525 DAMAGES BY JURY

D. Smith Mereshon Also Gets Verdict in Suit Against Clifford B. Ellin

YARDLEY CASE IS ON

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 27.—Two verdicts were announced in the Court of Common Pleas. A sealed verdict for $525.50 was returned by a jury in the case of William Lippincott, of Bristol, against John H. Tregurtha, of Edgely. The case was tried in Court No. 2 before Judge William C. Ryan.

Lippincott sued Tregurtha following an automobile accident on the road between Bristol and Tullytown when Lippincott was injured and had to remain in a hospital forty-eight days. The jury reached a verdict last night and it was returned sealed this morning.

In Court No. 2 another case was completed before Judge Ryan when a verdict was rendered for $2045.40 in the case of D. Smith Mereshon, of Morrisville, against Clifford B. Ellin, of Morrisville, a bus operator. Bunting and Satterthwaite, Doylestown, represented the plaintiff. The defendant did not appear in court to defend the suit and jury awarded the verdict without retiring to deliberate.

Mereshon testified that Ellin ordered a bus body from him in 1921 to cost about $1800. The body was completed with the exception of the painting and, according to the plaintiff, the defendant took it away before the paint job was completed. Less than $100 in cash had been paid on the contract by Ellin, it was shown. The bill for the bus was $1709 plus interest since 1921, minus certain other deductions, for part payment and minus the paint contract, or a total amount of $2045.40.

The third day of the trial of the ejectment case of the Philadelphia Suburban Gas and Electric Company against the Yardley Mills Company, Inc., of Yardley, started in Court No. 1 before Judge Shull.

Hallow'en Dance Will Be Given by High School Class

A Hallow'en masque dance is being sponsored by the February class of '30, of the Bristol high school, for the night of Friday, October 28th.

Prizes will be offered for the best comic and fancy costumes. This affair is exclusively for the alumni members, the student body and their friends.

Music will be furnished by a well-known local orchestra, and the committee in charge consists of the following: Roberta Pearson, chairman; Marian Barclay, Eleanor Moore, Ruth Fisher, William Wichser, Albert Shepherd.

A surprise party was tendered Mrs. Laura McDonald, of Mill street, on Tuesday evening, the occasion having been Mrs. McDonald's birthday anniversary. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed. The guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Owen Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Petty, Mr. and Mrs. Harry McMullen, and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Babbitt and daughter, Miss Lillian Babbitt, Mr. and Mrs. William McDonald and son, William, Mrs. Fred Rockey, and Miss Anna McDonald, of Bristol; Mr. and Mrs. Earl William McMullen, and George Williams, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Anna Weest, of Andalusia, Pa.

LETTER TO VOTERS OF FIRST WARD A FRANK CALL FOR PARTY LOYALTY AND SUPPORT OF PRIMARY PRINCIPLE

Issue Involved Far Transcends the Success or Failure of John F. Smoyer's Personal or Political Ambitions

SPEAKS AS HEAD OF ADMINISTRATION ATTACKED

Democratic Nomination Meaningless Except That It Meets Actual Technicalities of The Law

Burgess Clifford L. Anderson in a letter addressed to the Republican voters of the First Ward of Bristol Borough, vigorously attacks the councilmanic candidacy of John F. Smoyer upon the Democratic ticket. Mr. Anderson in no uncertain terms says that had Mr. Smoyer captured the nomination which he sought upon the Republican ticket that he would have expected the support of every loyal Republican.

"Unquestionably," says Burgess Anderson, "if Mr. Smoyer had won the Republican nomination in the Primary of last month, he would have expected every Republican in the First Ward to support him in the November Election, just as they did four years ago. I challenge him to deny the truth of that statement. The very fact that he sought the Republican nomination, and only the Republican nomination, is evidence that he expected all other Republicans to abide by the spirit and principle of the Primary, in the event that he was successful."

The Anderson letter, which the writer has asked the Courier to publish in full, reads as follows:

Friend and Fellow Republican:
There is something so utterly unlike the history, tradition and sound Republicanism of Bristol in the political course announced by Mr. John F. Smoyer, following his defeat for the only nomination he sought in the recent Primary, that as head of the Administration which in reality is being attacked, I feel warranted in addressing the Republicans of the First Ward upon the subject.

Mr. Smoyer was a candidate in the Primary for the Republican nomination to succeed himself in Borough Council. He filed only a Republican petition, and he was not, therefore, the candidate of any other group, faction or party. He based his candidacy squarely upon the fire defense question, and by every statement and act prior to the Primary he publicly served notice that he was submitting that question and his candidacy to the decision of the Republican voters of the First Ward in the Primary. By every principle involved in the Direct Primary, therefore, his position and his acts were equivalent to direct pledges to the citizenship that he expected to abide by majority rule and be bound by the results of the Republican Primary.

Certainly there was every reason why this should have been expected of him. Four years earlier, his candidacy for Borough Council resulted in a tie vote in the Primary, for himself and the candidate supported by what is characterized as the regular Republican organization. This tie required a drawing, which Mr. Smoyer won. It is fitting to recall at this time—and it is quite in contrast with Mr. Smoyer's own present position—that he then expected and received the support of all Republicans in the First Ward in the ensuing Election, wholly regardless of what their sympathies or inclinations had been in the Primary.

Unquestionably, if Mr. Smoyer had won the Republican nomination in the Primary of last month, he would have expected every Republican in the First Ward to support him in the November Election, just as they did four years ago. I challenge him to deny the truth of that statement. The very fact that he sought the Republican nomination, and only the Republican nomination, is evidence that he expected all other Republicans to abide by the spirit and the principle of the Primary, in the event that he was successful.

By what principle of conduct, then, and by what code of honor or character of decent sportsmanship, can he justify the position he has taken in refusing to abide by a contest which did not happen to bring him the nomination that he sought?

We all know that the nomination which he did procure is meaningless, except that it meets the actual technicalities of the law. He has never been a Democrat, and obviously he did not think enough of that party to file a petition for its Councilmanic nomination in the whole of the First Ward only four Democrats were enrolled to participate in the September Primary, and of these only two wrote Mr. Smoyer's name in upon the Democratic ballot. It is quite true that he thereby procured the Democratic nomination, but what is the situation thus created, and what is its real significance?

Quite evidently Mr. Smoyer's present line of reasoning is this: If he can get the four Democrats in the Ward to vote for him in November, and if at the same time he can prevail upon the Republicans who voted for him in the Primary to violate and despoil their Republicanism as he is violating and despoiling his own Republicanism, he can at least make a serious effort to upset the desires of a majority of the Republicans of the First Ward, and perhaps temporarily nullify the Republicanism of that Ward.

I can say unqualifiedly that in taking that position, and in resorting to such tactics, Mr. Smoyer not only deliberately tramples upon the principle of the Direct Primary and the most important fundamentals of party government, but is ungrateful and unjust in seeking to stab in the back the very thing that he was willing and anxious to stand for and support, so long as it served his purposes or seemed to hold the possibility of doing so.

His entire manipulation, therefore, is a ghastly exhibition of party assassination and political trickery that deserves the rebuke and repudiation of every loyal Republican who believes in party and supports the first principle upon which the whole political structure of our country rests.

For I can say with the most sincere conviction, which is the result of much observation and experience, that party principle—Republican party principle—means much more in the long run than a single seat in Borough Council. The issue that is involved in this situation, therefore, far transcends the success or the failure of Mr. John F. Smoyer's personal or political ambitions.

The sum total of political policy in the United States is the aggregate of the political principles and party loyalty expressed and adhered to by the innumerable industrial and rural communities throughout the country which, like Bristol, are dependent upon the sound economic policies of the Republican Party for their prosperity. If the principle of the Primary and of party loyalty are to mean nothing, and Republicanism is to be abandoned for Democracy at the will or caprice of individuals who believe in party and Primary only to the extent that either or both happen to serve their own particular purposes, there can be no stability and the very roots of government and prosperity alike are endangered.

What I have just said is no exaggeration of the significance of the present situation. The individual is the foundation of our form of government. The only logical and orderly

Annual Harvest Home Will Open Here Tonight

The annual harvest party, given by the Sisters and pupils of St. Mark's School, in aid of their Book Fund, will open tonight in the school hall, and continue until Saturday. Many beautiful booths, tastefully decorated in the Hallow'en motif, serve to attract the eye, while groceries, cakes and candies appeal to the palate.

An especially pretty booth is the one displaying fancy work. Here may be purchased some exquisite products of the needle, jewelry, and other dainties dear to the feminine heart.

There also will be on hand several booths that will appeal to the men. "Knights of Columbus" night. All the members of the local Council are expected to be present to aid this affair.

MEETING TONIGHT

A change has been made in the coaching staff of the Bristol A. A. football team. Frank Brack, who for the past two years has coached the squad, has resigned. A special meeting of the team will be held in No. 1 Fire House tonight at 8 o'clock to decide on what manner the team will be handled the rest of the season. Every member of the squad is requested to be in attendance as a number of important matters are to be voted on.

S. M. SMYER ADDRESSES P. T. A. IN HULMEVILLE

Large Group Is Interested In Welfare of The Scholars

NEW MEMBERS GAINED

HULMEVILLE, Oct. 27.—S. M. Smyser, assistant county superintendent of Bucks County, was the speaker at the October meeting of the Hulmeville-Middletown District Parent-Teacher Association, held in the school building here last evening.

It was reported that about 29 new members had been gained for the association recently, and enthusiasm and interest is steadily increasing. At last evening's session many parents were present from sections in the outlying districts represented by the scholars.

The gathering numbered about 70.

In his talk, Mr. Smyser spoke of the value of such an organization, and continued by giving examples of where splendid work had been accomplished by co-operation on the part of the instructors and the Parent-Teacher Association members. He added that the results are not always particularly noticeable, but that many things from which much good is derived take place within the school itself and little news of said work reaches the public.

Other numbers on the program included: Singing, "America"; a health sketch, by third and fourth grade pupils in charge of Miss Josie Kimble; singing, "My Old Kentucky Home."

Refreshments of sweet cider and doughnuts were served by the committee in charge.

Hulmeville

The proceeds of the Hallow'en party which will be staged in the parish room of Grace Episcopal Church tomorrow evening, will be used as the nucleus of a sum for the contemplated library, which will be put at the disposal of the town. There will be many prizes for costumes in which those who attend will appear, and the public is invited.

OVER $50,000 WILLED BY LATE MARY E. GREEN

CHARITABLE BEQUEST

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 27.—By the will of Mary Emma Green, spinster, late of Quakertown, several public bequests of interest are made in disposing of an estate estimated to include $50,000 in personal property and $6,000 real estate. Many valuable pieces of antique furniture and objects d'art are willed to relatives.

To the Bucks County Historical Society is given a gold watch which belonged to Miss Green's grandfather, William Green.

Five thousand dollars is left in trust to the Quakertown Trust Co., the interest to be paid to Richland Monthly Meeting for the purpose of keeping family graves or any part of the burying ground in condition, if there is any balance.

To the trustees of the Colored School of Mount Pleasant, South Carolina, is given $1,000, the income of which is to be used for the school.

The income of $3,000 is bequeathed to the Poor Relief Fund of Quakertown.

To Grand View Hospital, Sellersville is left the income of $3,000 toward the endowment of a free bed in memory of Miss Green's parents, Richard R. and Sarah P. Green.

The Quakertown Trust Co., is named executor of the estate.

LANCASTER, Pa., Oct. 27 (I.N.S.)—Delegates to the 181st annual session of the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States today considered routine business preparatory to adjournment this afternoon, after four days of conference today.

Today's program included devotional services by Rev. William E. Harr, of Lock Haven, and an address by Rev. David Dunn, of Harrisburg.

Reports of committees and an Elders' Conference also were to be given places on the final session.

OUR HIGHWAY TO HAPPINESS

Anyone reading the letter of the Rev. David M. Steele, a Philadelphia rector, which was recently published in a church paper, cannot help but note the contrast between conditions in European countries and those in the United States.

"I came away saddened and disheartened," he said in regard to England, continuing to make note of the lack of industry and therefore prosperity of that country of the British empire. Then giving glimpses of Italy and Germany as he found them, the clergyman told that Italy is more industrious and Germany more prosperous.

How much we have to be thankful for on this side of the Atlantic, in this united nation of the states! We have not only the industrious spirit of the Italians, and the prosperity of the Germans, but the happy attitude toward our daily tasks that makes life seem rosy at all times.

Nowhere in the world is there found a better nor more widespread spirit of "give and take" than in the American home, village, on the city streets, and in the business world at large. It is only natural that the foreigner who comes to our shores would look on in wonder at the manner in which residents of the U. S. look upon their tasks at which they make a livelihood, and at their very apparent prosperity in general.

Optimism prevails in all circles. The workman, plying his hammer and saw, whistles as he does so. There is a spirit of badinage during office hours, as the work goes merrily and steadily on.

And when the day's routine is finished there is consequently not the tired feeling prevalent that there would probably otherwise be. The very attitude taken in regard to man's labor helps the time to pass more quickly and with less pronounced effort, to the end that he is able to enjoy an evening with friends, at an evening's entertainment, or in athletic enjoyment.

Americans have found the main road to sheer enjoyment of life—the highway that has productive work for its basis, but along the side of which are the flowers of comradery, tolerance, and joyful outlook. Jaunts along a road of life such as this tend to keep not "Young America fit," but "America young and fit," to the end that the nation is one to which others look for advice, example and hope.

What this country would like to have, if possible, is coal from contented mines.

What did those New York chemists do with the bad taste they took out of cod liver oil?

There are those to whom "Be yourself" is the worst possible advice you can offer.

How can parents bring up the child in the way it should go when they allow it to go anywhere it pleases and at any time?

Many Koreans make it a practice to sleep on the railroad tracks. From the standpoint of economy, no doubt. They do not have to tip the porter.

It may be no one is a hero to his own valet, but he can build up a remarkable reputation for engineering skill around the house if he can change a faucet washer without calling a plumber.

"THE FIRST AUTO," with Earle Oldfield and Patsy Ruth Miller is a Warner Bros. production of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

In 1896 Bob, son of Hank Armstrong, a horse fancier, knowing his father's hatred of machines, is secretly inventing gasoline engines and openly courting Rose Robbins. Hank horsechaps his son because of his love for automobiles. Rose intervenes, saving Bob from a beating. The boy decides to leave home. Rose promises to wait for him. Steve Bentley, Bob's rival, proposes to Rose but she refuses him. This added to a thorough Bob once gave him, angers Steve. While Bob is becoming a "speed demon" Hank has allowed himself and his business to fall into decay. Rose tries to gain Hank's forgiveness for Bob, but—

While his father's mind was turning in such unhealthy directions Bob was working in the very business that had brought about this situation. He had landed in Detroit with only a little money in his pockets. He had found a cheap boarding house, paid his rent, left his bag, and started immediately for the factory where he knew automobiles were being made.

Having been attracted by the sounds which he heard proceeding from the rear of the factory he wandered around and came to a race track. There he saw one of the early type of racing cars being tested. He gazed in awe at the machine, and edged closer, trying to see what was going on. A tall, lean man in a long frock coat was standing off from the car, and a heavy-set, round-faced man with a kerchief tied about his neck was half lost within the engine.

As the man at the engine groped around for a tool, Bob handed him the implement. The mechanics shot this new-comer what might be termed a few "dirty looks." But Bob only grinned. The heavy-set man raised his head and removed his cap and goggles. Bob immediately offered to hold them, much to the disgust of the helpers.

"Hey," growled one bearded mechanic under his breath, "don't you know who that is? That's Barney Oldfield!"

"Gee!" Bob gasped. "Well, what d'you know about that!" In adoration he raised his eyes to his hero. Here he was, standing right beside one of the most famous automobile men of the day. He caught his breath, and hugged the cap and goggles close to his breast. Once he surreptitiously tried the cap on his own head, but quickly removed it when he felt the eyes of the bearded mechanic upon him.

Oldfield finally completed his adjustments, put on another pair of goggles without any cap, and climbed into the seat of the racing car.

"I'm going to try to get it up to sixty, Henry," he stated, turning to the tall, lean man.

Bob gasped again. Gosh! That must be the famous Henry Ford. It was almost too much. Bob thought, to be standing so close to such celebrities—and the very man with whom he wanted to work. And here they were, talking about getting sixty miles an hour out of a car. Why, Oldfield might be killed in the attempt. It was dangerous to go that fast. But he saw Henry Ford nod and take out his stop-watch.

Oldfield motioned for his mechanics to crack the car. There was a loud rattling, the bang of a back-fire, and off went the machine. It seemed to go like the wind—almost flying. Bob held his breath for those few seconds that the car went spinning around the track. And as Oldfield returned to the goal the mechanics sent up a cheer. He had broken all records. He had put the car up to sixty an hour.

The incident gave Bob much to think about when he returned to his boarding house that evening, tired and happy, to write to Rose. He told her all the events of the day, and explained that the following morning he was going to take her father's letter of introduction to Haynes and have a talk with the man. And if the letter was a little short on love and a little long on mechanics, who can blame the boy? Even Rose was not loathe to forgive him, for she realized, because of her deep and tender feelings for him, how very strong was his devotion to the cause of progress.

Bob presented his letter to Haynes, as he had planned, and the two sat long together. Bob told the inventor of his work and showed him his ideas, which he had sketched out in Maple City. The great man listened with interest. It was through such enthusiasm as Bob showed that inventions had come into being. Haynes had sympathy with any of the young people who were anxious to help the cause along. And Bob's knowledge of machinery was certainly not a drawback.

Haynes suggested that he place Bob in his own factory and allow him to help build the cars that he loved. It was the long-looked-for opportunity Bob was willing, anxious, to work anywhere, any place, just so that he could gather experience and further his knowledge of machinery.

And so he took his place, a few mornings later, with the other mechanics and began the assembling of cars. At that period the process was slow and painful—an unbelievable contrast to the swift speed with which the factories today turn out automobiles. And as Bob worked on he was finally allowed to inspect the finished machines and pass them on. And it was this work, as well as the intelligent use of his brains, that led up to his work as mechanic to those who set speed records and broke them.

But it was not long before the racing instinct, which he had certainly inherited from his father, began to assert itself. Bob was allowed to make time records on the factory track. The thrill of the air flying past, the motor burring beneath, added zest to this phase of his work, and it was soon that Bob began entering races in competition with other acknowledged speedsters of the day. He drove with abandon, with utter lack of care for his own safety, and always in a red car. And before long the "Red Demon" began to be heard of and talked about.

CHAPTER XVII

A few days after Rose had experienced her first walk home from an automobile ride she saw Hank Armstrong wandering along the street. From the porch of the Robbins residence she could watch the shambling figure plodding slowly towards nowhere in particular. Her heart went out to the pathetic old man. After all, he was Bob's father, and certainly he had suffered from his actions and his cruelties. Perhaps she might be able to effect some sort of reconciliation between the two. She knew that Bob and his father did not correspond, and some news of the boy and his success might soften his father's heart.

So when Hank reached the gate of the Mayor's home, Rose left her chair and started toward the top of the steps. Hank's head was bowed, but the sight of the familiar ground caused him to lift his face.

"Oh, Mr. Armstrong," Rose called from the porch. "Wait a minute, please." She ran down the steps and out to the gate.

As Hank paused, Steve Bentley sauntered by, and when he saw Rose coming out, he leaned against the fence rail to wait for her. Hank frowned, as he recognized Rose. To him she was the daughter of the friend who had, according to Hank's way of thinking, deserted him along with all the rest of his acquaintances. And he immediately assumed the defensive, as though fearing the possibility of an attempt to reunite him with her father. The sight of the girl brought bitter memories of his son. Once he had hoped that the two—but no! That was all past, now.

"O, Mr. Armstrong," she smiled eagerly. "I've just had a letter from Bob. You should be proud of him."

At the mention of his son's name the old man started. He shut his lips tightly, and the picture of that morning in the office flashed through his mind. For a moment a wave of sadness and regret passed over him. But it left him high and dry on the sands of unforgiveness. He shook his head.

"Yeh!" He turned to go, refusing to be interested.

"He's your son, and he wants to hear from you," Rose pleaded.

Bob wanted to hear from him! The old man softened. Yes, after all, Bob was his son, and there was no reason why the two couldn't be friendly. He had been a bit harsh that morning, and he had driven Bob out of his own home. Perhaps, after all—

Tree Planting Adds To Beauty of Highways

The beautification of Pennsylvania's highways through the systematic planting of trees and shrubs, is one of the objectives of the Department of Highways.

In 1901, Pennsylvania enacted its first laws leading to a beautification of highways, the development of scenic beauty of roads, offering an inducement for the planting of trees along a highway in a remission of road tax and a penalty attached for the injury or destruction of a tree. Prior to 1901, however, individuals had done much to add to the beauty of the highways, as attested by the many old trees one sees on stretches of roads in various sections of the State. In recent years, the problem of beautifying the highways has been seriously considered by the Department of Highways, and a program of roadside scenic development has been carefully worked out.

the fast session of the General Assembly having passed an act, empowering the Department to proceed with tree planting on a more comprehensive scale than has been attempted in the past.

Europe has set us an example with its poplar-lined roads of France, the flower and vine-covered hedgerows of England and the fruit-tree bordered highways of Germany; with these in mind some attention began to be given to correcting and improving a stubborn natural condition.

The physical condition of Pennsylvania's highways has been improved until these roadways are second to none in this or any other country. As a consequence, the value of land adjacent to the highways has increased and economic conditions improved. How much more then would this be true were these miles of concrete and macadam bordered by trees, vines and shrubs, for man is ever willing to yield to his instinctive longing for the beautiful?

Trees particularly lend themselves to a scheme of beautification and "He who plants a tree and cares for it has added at least his mite to God's creation." In Pennsylvania, when roadways are tree-bordered, hedge rows are flower-covered, and those cuts and fills where Mother Earth is now bare and unadorned through the work of man's hands, are vine-clad, tourists will carry the praises of the Keystone State far and wide, adding lustre to its greatness.

BELIEVE NEW FORD CAR WILL BE SHOWN SOON

Official Introduction in England Is Scheduled For December 2nd

IS EAGERLY AWAITED

The first definite official indication as to when the new Ford car would put in an appearance in this country has become manifested in the activities of the Ford Motor Company of England. Predictions have been made that it would be formally introduced anywhere from November to February. Now comes word which seems to point to a date in November with almost positive assurance.

For instance, the Ford Motor Company of England, as stated in a recent issue of "The Ford Dealers News," announced in their official advertising that the new car would be introduced at the Motor Industries Exhibition called for October 7. Advertising announcements to this end were ready to send throughout the country. In the meantime, a delay developed brought about by changes of specifications both in this country and in England. The announcements in England were declared premature and now come cable advice that the Motor Industries Exhibition is definitely set for December 2, with of course, the English Ford car making its bow to the Ford field in that country. There is no reason to believe that the two months' delay will hurt business there and it seems to be a positive date.

It is almost certain that the Ford car will be announced in this country before it puts in an appearance at the Motor Industries Exhibition in England. If it is not then a most embarrassing situation would be developed. For instance, all details and specifications would be immediately cabled from England, followed by photographs giving a good idea of its appearance and the actual announcement by the Ford Company in this country would be an announcement in some only. With the nation-wide, tremendous interest which has been created by Ford publicity and long period of waiting, it is not probable that the public would be permitted to get news of the new Ford in a round-about manner such as just described. It is quite apparent that the Ford dealers here may expect the announcement some time prior to the car's exhibition in England. This would mean only a few weeks more of waiting.

HARRISBURG, Oct. 27 (L.N.S.)—The State Board of Pardons today refused commutation of the death sentences of Jerry Weeks, Fayette county, and William Meyers, Philadelphia, it was announced.

Weeks was convicted of killing his sister-in-law, Marie Williams, and setting fire to her home, burning her three children to death.

Meyers killed a Philadelphia policeman.

Burgess Anderson Calls Smokey's Candidacy Political Trickery

way that the individual can express himself and herself is through established political parties. Political parties are themselves the essence of majority rule and the definite evidence of the determination of our people to speak collectively with an intelligent and effective voice. If party will be subverted to individual dictates and minority opinion, then party government itself is impotent and expressionless. And certainly if the Republicans of Bristol do not realize what party government means, and how definitely and inseparably their own prosperity and welfare are dependent upon the sound policies and doctrines of Republicanism, then we are, indeed, in a sorry way.

As the head of a local Republican Administration vindicated, supported and sustained by four of the five Republican Wards of Bristol in the September Primary, therefore, I ask the Republican voters of the First Ward to remember these facts, and to remain faithful to their own party, their own integrity as Republicans, and their own interests as citizens of a great industrial community, when they mark their ballots in the approaching November Election.

I speak, not for an individual but for the spirit of the Primary and loyalty to party, when I say that their duty is to their party and its nominee.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) CLIFFORD L. ANDERSON.

Survey, Which Engineers
Will Start Soon, Plans For
Phila. As Huge Metropolis

Factories can now build away from railroads so long as they are near good highways.

"In the opinion of Walter H. Johnson, president of the Philadelphia

Electric Company, education probably will undergo radical changes.

"Thomas Edison a short time ago remarked that the time was coming when the younger children would be taught largely through the medium of the motion picture," Mr. Johnson said.

"One of the most pressing and important problems is that of transportation and traffic control. Commercial aviation is still in its infancy, and no one will care to predict what aviation will be fifty years from now. We may revolutionize our housing systems. Our narrow streets probably will have disappeared long before that period.

We will have to have a greater water system to take care of the tremendous growth in population."

"A campaign will be started early in the winter to raise $130,000 for the first year's work. As soon as pledges assure the federation of sufficient financial support, the matter will be placed in the hands of engineering experts who will start on the survey."

"The federation plans to determine as accurately as possible the needs for the future in the 3500 square miles around Philadelphia and covering portions of Delaware and New Jersey. Whole will fit together perfectly."

Future highway systems will be considered, and the needs for water supplies will be determined. Efforts will be made to find the ideal locations for recreational centers and for educational institutions.

"The committee hopes within three years to have a master plan for the entire region, which extends from Washington's Crossing on the north to Wilmington on the south. This plan will be worked out so that each political subdivision may play its part in road building, water supply construction and park building, so that the whole will fit together perfectly."

TO PREACHERS

Church announcements are printed without charge in the Courier. Such announcements, however, must be written and forwarded to the Courier office.

Notices for publication in Saturday's issue should be received at the office not later than Friday noon, otherwise, appearance on Saturday cannot be promised.

The pastor of every church, in the territory in which the Courier circulates, is invited to make use of the columns of this paper for notices of interest, both to the general public and members of his particular denomination.
